

Samsung Galaxy Note 8.0 May Pop Up in February

CNET

Samsung Electronics may add another member to its already large family of tablets.

The company is set to unveil the Galaxy Note [1] 8.0, possibly next month at the Mobile World Congress conference, according to self-described "fansite" SamMobile [2], which did not cite sources for the information.

Among the mobile device vendors, Samsung has been one of the most aggressive in pushing its tablet [3] lineup. It was one of the first to introduce an Android [4] tablet in the original Galaxy Tab [5], and it releases new sizes and variants on a regular basis.

The Galaxy Note line, which includes a stylus, is geared toward people looking to create their own media or content.

The Galaxy Note 8.0, according to SamMobile, will feature an 8-inch 1280x800 Super Clear LCD display, a 5-megapixel rear camera, a 1.3-megapixel front-facing camera, 2GB of RAM, and 16GB to 32GB of internal storage with a slot for more memory. It also packs a 4,600 mAh battery.
