

Will the Google X Phone Be Shatter-Proof?

Pete Pachal

Google reported its quarterly earnings yesterday [1], and although the company's Motorola division posted a big loss, executives pointed out that the hardware maker had a 12- to 18-month product pipeline already in place when Google acquired it in 2011. That roadmap is now nearing its end, and attention is turning to what comes after — specifically, the rumored Google X phone.

Rumors of the Google X phone began last fall when the Wall Street Journal ran a piece [2] declaring its existence, citing "people familiar with the matter." The Google X phone is said to be the most advanced Android hardware the company could possibly make, which will "stand apart" from all other phones on the market. A Google X tablet is supposedly also in the works.

Source URL (retrieved on 01/25/2015 - 10:31am):

http://www.wirelessdesignmag.com/news/2013/01/will-google-x-phone-be-shatter-proof?qt-most_popular=0&qt-blogs=0&qt-digital_editions=0

Links:

[1] http://mashable.com/2013/01/22/google-q4-earnings/?utm_medium=email&utm_source=newsletter

[2] <http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424127887324731304578191711598368942.html>

[2] <http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424127887324731304578191711598368942.html>